Curious Children

Early childhood is the most powerful time to explore the world.

Exploration is generated by curiosity, and curiosity stems from comfortability. When children feel comfortable with the people they are surrounded by, they feel free to embrace their surroundings in new and exciting ways. In the classroom, we work to build trusting relationships with our students first, then we push their curiosity. We engage their sense of wonder by creating a classroom that is filled with innovative and stimulating centers that focus on the natural interests of the student.

Children express their interests and curiosity in different ways. One child may run to pick up a bug or frog outside to learn more about it, while another may watch from a distance and ask questions like, "Why do frogs jump?" or "Do bugs get married?" Each child is curious, yet their curiosity is presented in a multitude of ways.

Make Your Piggy Bank Happy!

We are offering a $75 Referral Bonus for the month of February, so if you know a family who is looking for the best child care in Glen Rose, tell them to stop by for a tour of our school!

Being a part of each student's discovery is an essential piece of the learning process. Students look to their teachers and parents for affirmation that they have done well in their explorations. They also look to us in their disappointments. We are the sounding board that helps them know that they will figure it out for the future, and that trying again is just a part of the process.

We are their hope, their assurance, and their curiosity fuelers. Let us all help our children and students remain curious, always.
