May Spotlight

We are pleased to introduce you to Ms. Kendall. She has worked with us for 1.4 years, and she is a valued member of our team!

Ms. Kendall assists our teachers in every classroom, helps in the kitchen and plays an intricate role in ensuring our building is clean and sanitized.

We are very fortunate and grateful to have Ms. Kendall on our team. She says, "I enjoy helping the teachers and working with the children."

Thank you, Ms. Kendall, for everything you do!

Please help us celebrate Teacher Appreciation Week, May 2-6. Our teachers do amazing work, and everyone works so hard, so let's celebrate our teachers.

Raising a Strong-Willed Child

Children who are determined to do things their way are often labeled "bad kids." However, their tenacity will serve them well in life, and it's your job as a parent to channel their energy into something positive.

When your child exhibits intense frustration and anger, it's important to acknowledge their feelings rather than minimizing them. When you redirect them and they want to know why, they don't want to hear "because I said so." Explain the reasons so they can understand the consequences, whether they're safety, social or moral issues. Keep your explanation brief, and make sure there's a valid reason for setting limits.

Rather than allowing a lengthy debate with your child, give one warning and a consequence. Then stick with it. When your child tries to tell you or their peers what to do, help them find more appropriate and respectful ways of communicating. Remember that modeling good behavior is the best way to teach your child how to behave.

Raising a strong-willed child is often challenging but also an exciting adventure!
